Well, they were probably not so like the scientist to whom a skull had been given by a fossil collector, and was so frustrated by the condition that he found it as he called the irritated of the dinosaurs. Nobody knows why kosmeceratops- cousin nearby Triceratops-His had such a distinctive, but probably had to do something with sexual selection (that is, the males Kosmenorotops with larger frills were more attractive for females). And Falcaurus was the typical third party, up to his equally strange diet: even if this dinosaur was closely related to the tyrannosaurus and birds of prey that eat meat, it seems to have spent most of his time changing the vegetation (and probably hiding so on others Creatures would not have done so "t making fun of it). Well, you have nothing on Panphagia, a 230 million dinosaur of years whose name literally translates how "eats everything". It is not that the panphagia was more hungry for the others Dinosaurs of the triassic period; rather, scientists believe that this prosauropode may have been omnivorous, which means that it has integrated its vegetable diet with occasional raw mea relationships. Shortly after the first dinosaurs appeared on earth, about 230 million years Fa, they began to separate in varieties of meat eaters and plants. Hadrosars, the "drinking duck" dinosaur, they were a bit like the gru i those nature documentaries you always see on TV.
